"Tens of thousands of photographers, illustrators and videographers have licensed content through Shutterstock over the last nine years," said Founder and CEO Jon Oringer. "Surpassing $150 million in contributor payouts is an exciting reflection of their artistic talent and the increasingly visual world we live in. Businesses of all sizes need images and artists everywhere - from San Francisco to Shanghai - can earn money by licensing their work through Shutterstock," he added.

As one of the world's largest providers of visual content, Shutterstock has more than 750,000 customers in more than 150 countries. Shutterstock's VP of Content Scott Braut, who works with many of the company's contributors, said, "Revenue potential for artists is growing every day. Customers are licensing more images and videos than ever before and Shutterstock is committed to delivering a rewarding experience for all of our artists."

Shutterstock currently has over 900,000 high-quality video clips and 24 million images available for license. To explore the collection, visit shutterstock.com.
