

Shutterstock's Collection Exceeds 50 Million Images

NEW YORK, NY, March 9, 2015—Shutterstock, Inc. (NYSE: SSTK), a leading global provider of commercial imagery and music, has surpassed 50 million royalty free images in its collection. A true two-sided marketplace, Shutterstock's contributors currently add more than 50,000 new images daily and have been paid more than $250 million since Shutterstock's founding, including more than \$80 million in 2014.

"Shutterstock's collection has grown to be as diverse and dynamic as the talented contributors who provide their work to customers," said Paul Brennan, VP Content Operations and Contributor Success at Shutterstock. "Armed with the powerful data generated by our vast marketplace, contributors have the information needed to create the images buyers want."

Each photograph, illustration, vector and video is reviewed by our curators, which results in an exceptional collection for marketing agencies, media organizations and businesses to create distinctive work and tell their stories.

Shutterstock is celebrating its photographers, illustrators, videographers and musicians all year long on Shutterstock Panorama[™]. This series highlights a new contributor from a different country each week — offering insight into their work and their inspirations.
